Dear Colleagues:

This issue focuses on the Buddhist architecture in East Asia. Over the last two thousand years since its legendary introduction to the Han court in the first century, Buddhism had transformed not only people’s intellectual and practical lives but also the built environments of East Asia. From Mount Kunlun to the Japanese Isles, from the Mongolian prairie to the coasts of South China Sea, mountains were carved for devotion and hermitic practices, cities were rebuilt for new religious life, and new architectural types were created to honor the relics of the enlightened ones and to cope with the evolving religion as it was gradually integrated with the local cultures. The articles in this issue are aimed to capture the scope and diversity of Buddhist architecture in East Asia, and at the same time, reflecting the front lines of research in the field.

The scholarship on East Asian Buddhist architecture has been so far highly focused on famous temples, influential monasteries, and monumental landmarks. In this collection, while by no means bypassing those significant examples and topics, we try to restore a more balanced picture of Buddhist practice and the built environment by incorporating buildings and planning from the overlooked regions and aspects of Buddhism. We encourage the contribution that features shrines and temples in small villages as well as those in sacred mountains, forms reshaped by contemporary life as well as those of purer historical styles, and Buddhist practice in the domestic realm as well as those of pilgrimage significance.

The scholarship on East Asian Buddhist architecture has also been highly focused on the more publicized dominating cultures of China, Japan, and Korea. In this collection, we encourage discussions of examples from the neglected regions in the field and cultures of religious hybridity from those countries, as well as the rich and colorful Buddhist landscapes of Mongolia, Vietnam, etc. We are especially interested in the Buddhist architectural traditions along cultural borders, regions that used to be independent regimes in the past but now are within the borders of a modern country such as the ones named above, for instance, the Ryukyu Islands.

We also want to go beyond the well-established scholarships on stylistic changes, technical development of architectural carpentry, and the typological studies of halls and pagodas. We are especially interested in the way architecture is built for and shaped by the Buddhist practice of a given community, the way architecture is integrated into the spiritual life and material culture, and the way different art forms, both spatial and performing arts, share common themes and concepts with architecture to foster a comprehensive culture that sustains life and identity of a place. These are significant issues not only for the scholarship on architectural history, but also meaningful for the contemporary building of our own life and faith.

Please find the details for the submission on the following Journal website:

https://www.mdpi.com/journal/religions/special_issues/Buddhist_Architecture

If you are interested, please follow the instruction on the website to submit your manuscript. I hope we can work together to create an important issue for this prestigious journal. I look forward to reading your paper and learning from your research. Thank you.

Best,

Shuishan Yu
Aibin Yan

Guest Editor: Shuishan Yu
Affiliation:
School of Architecture
College of Arts, Media and Design
Northeastern University
151 Ryder Hall
360 Huntington Avenue
Boston, MA 02115-5000

Website:
https://camd.northeastern.edu/faculty/shuishan-yu/
https://www.youtube.com/c/ShuishanYuGuqin
E-Mail: sh.yu@northeastern.edu
Interests: Chinese architecture, Buddhist architecture in East Asia, guqin music and literati arts

Co-Guest Editor: Aibin Yan
Affiliation:
Department of Landscape Planning and Design
School of Art Design and Media
East China University of Science and Technology
130 Meilong Road, Xuhui District
Shanghai, China, 200237

Website:
https://art.ecust.edu.cn/portal/article/index/id/140/cid/65.html
https://baike.baidu.com/item/%E9%97%AB%E7%88%B1%E5%AE%BE/17488059?fr=aladdin

E-Mail: yanaibin@ecust.edu.cn

Interests: Chinese architectural history, Buddhist architecture in East Asia, Chinese classical garden, architectural heritage protection