DIGITAL HUMANITIES PROJECT

The Black Girlhood Project, www.blackgirlhoodproject.com

This project is my website, which is designed to encourage further academic and artistic consideration of black girls in literature, as well as to offer black girlhood scholars and researchers a centralized location for networking and project discussions. Currently, the site comprises a blog on black female children and adolescents in literature, an increasing list of creative and scholarly texts portraying or analyzing black girls, and a forum for interested parties. In the future, the project will include an interactive map of black girl characters in literature and a webpage where emerging writers may post/publish short fiction or excerpts of larger works featuring black girls.
